FACTORY COLLAPSE

2 At least 18 people were killed and up to 150 trapped on Wednesday when a factory collapsed near the eastern Pakistani city of Lahore, officials said, adding to a number of industrial disasters to hit the South Asian nation. Rescue workers digging for survivors with construction equipment have recovered 75 injured people so far, said Mohammad Usman, a senior local government official who was on the scene. Eighteen dead bodies have also been found, he said. Around 150 people were feared trapped under the rubble. REUTERS

3 A man who stabbed four people at The University of California Merced was later shot and killed by police. Two stabbing victims were flown out by medical helicopter while the others were treated on campus. LET IT SNOW

7 Transit officials unveiled new additions to its winter arsenal at a Cambridge maintenance facility on Wednesday, among them 10 massive "snow fighters" capable of clearing snow 15 feet in either direction. In the past, the rail relied on plows attached to the front of trains.

The new pieces of equipment, which also includes ride-on snow-blowers for T platforms and front-end loaders that travel on rails, cost $8.6 million.

RUSSIAN STRIKES IN SYRIA

5 Eighty-five to 90 percent of Russian strikes in Syria have hit the moderate Syrian opposition, the top U.S. diplomat for the Middle East told a congressional committee. Anne Patterson also told a House of Representatives hearing that President Barack Obama is considering additional ways to "intensify" the campaign against the Islamic State, which has seized swaths of territory in Syria and Iraq. "The president is looking at a number of other efforts to intensify our efforts in this battle," she said. REUTERS

Burned body near Bridgewater rails

Authorities are investigating.

NATE HOMAN

Police are asking for the public to help identify the burned remains of a woman found near railroad tracks in Bridgewater late Tuesday night.

The Plymouth County District Attorney's office said Wednesday that Bridgewater police received a 911 call at about 11:40 p.m. Tuesday for a report of suspicious activity in the area of the railroad tracks at Oak and Crapo streets in Bridgewater.

Responding officers found a woman aflame, hands bound behind her back and her feet tied together. She was pronounced dead at the scene. Her body was removed to the Office of the Chief Medical Examiner where the manner and cause of death will be determined.

"The identity is unknown," Plymouth County District Attorney Timothy Cruz said. "We believe it to be a female, and she has significant burns on her body. She was bound near the railroad tracks when she was discovered."

Cruz said that the woman was likely killed elsewhere and was dumped and burned at the site.

"This doesn't look random," said Thomas Shamshak, a private investigator and former Winthrop police chief. "The depravity of the act of tying someone up and torturing them might be to extract information, or an act of revenge, debt, narcotics-related, interpersonal, but certainly the act of tying them up and burning them is really a heinous example of torture."

Shamshak said that an autopsy would reveal whether the victim was burned alive when the medical examiners look for smoke damage in the lungs.

"The lack of concern in hiding the body offers a treasure trove of potential evidence," Shamshak said. "The fact that she was found by the railroad tracks, to me, says that the perpetrator is communicating some kind of message and wanted the remains to be found."

Danvers teen fit for trial

A judge ruled Wednesday that a Danvers teen is mentally competent to stand trial for allegedly raping and murdering his ninth-grade math teacher in 2013.

Philip Chism, 14 at the time, pleaded not guilty to raping and murdering 24-year-old Colleen Ritzer, a math teacher who was found dead in the woods near Danvers High School on Oct. 23, 2013.

The judge made the ruling after Chism, pictured, underwent a 20-day psychological evaluation, according to CBSBoston.

Ritzer had been raped and her throat was slashed open with a box cutter, according to authorities.

Police who discovered Ritzer's body in the woods near the school said that they found a note that said, "I hate you all."

Ritzer had asked Chism to stay after school the day she was reported missing.

police said. Chism has also been charged with attempted murder by strangulation, assault with intent to murder and assault and battery with a dangerous weapon after he allegedly attacked a female clinician at the facility where he was being held.

According to the Boston Herald, Chism was committed to the Worcester Recovery Center and Hospital for evaluation after he spent two days slamming his head against several surfaces, talking to an imaginary friend and talking about his desire to be gunned down by a vigilante back in October.

Salem District Court Judge David Lowy said that jury selection will resume and the jury will be seated by Nov. 16, barring any other setbacks. Essex County Assistant District Attorney Kate MacDougall said that the trial will likely stretch into December.

BRIEFS

Methuen man added to State Police Most Wanted

Investigators added a Methuen man to the state's Most Wanted Fugitives list Wednesday for his alleged role in a murder in Lawrence earlier this year.

Police said Yssael Lantigua-Alecon, 34, shot and killed a man in a nightclub on May 1.

Officers responded to a report of a shooting at Bali's Restaurant at 59 Essex Street in Lawrence.

Upon arrival, officers found a man laying on a bathroom floor suffering from several gunshot wounds. The victim, identified as Jose Campusano, was pronounced dead at the scene.

Investigators believe Lantigua-Alecon has at least six aliases and multiple fake IDs. He was living in Methuen at the time of the murder and should be considered armed and dangerous, police said. Anyone with information related to the whereabouts of Lantigua-Alecon can call state police at 1-800-KAPTURE (1-800-527-8873). METRO

T murals head

Art buyers told Metro they planned to spruce up living rooms and offices with the giant plywood showpieces.

SPENCER BUELL
spencerbuell@metro.us

Big rectangular windows to 1970s Boston, the murals hung for decades in Government Center, slowly collecting grime and cementing their place in the minds of Hub commuters as iconic pieces of public art.

Now, they're off to new homes, to grace the walls of T enthusiasts' living rooms and offices with one-of-a-kind public transit showpieces.

In all, 14 buyers paid $65,300 at auction for the 19 paintings, officials said. The work of Mary Beams, an artist who now lives in Minnesota, the 4-by-8-foot plywood works had been salvaged from the central MBTA station during renovations.

The priciest, one of a Green Line train called "Green Line Train," fetched $10,455. Officials said proceeds from the sales, minus a cut for the auctioneer, would pay for a tribute to the old murals on flame-resistant porcelain enamel, with the rest supporting future art projects in T stations.

On Wednesday, Amy Kruglak was among the first to pick up her purchase at the Skinner Auctioneers' Park Plaza office, loading a three-pack of paintings — of an empty train, a bespectacled conductor and a man reading a newspaper — into a pickup bound for her office in Newton.

Kruglak said her company, a health care software business called Curaspan, is going all-out on a Boston theme for its office near the Riverside T stop.

When a renovation in the building is done, she said the paintings would be the centerpieces of a kitchen and meeting area, which they plan to call "the Hub," surrounded by artwork of Boston landmarks and by conference rooms named after MBTA stations.

"The timing of the artwork being available is really perfect," Kruglak said. "It felt like it was a good piece of the puzzle."

They also called up old memories, she said, of her first job in the big city and the six years she spent passing through Government Center.

"When I told my roommate about this, she said, 'Do you know how many years we stood on that subway platform staring at those murals?'"

She wasn't the only one excited to own a piece of Boston history. Anne Talon of Cambridge told Metro she and her husband Paul Longergan liked the paintings so much they bought one each: one for a cozy spot in their home near a fireplace, another for Longergan's office in the Seaport.

"I remember when people looked that way and the styles of the clothes," said Talon, 50. "Of course, my kids don't."

McCann, who works in the Harvard Law School's career services office and holds an urban planning degree. When he and his husband Chad Wolfe, a lawyer, heard about the auction, McCann said they knew right away they had to have one.

"We thought it was a good intersection of our interests. Chad likes to purchase original art and I like trains," McCann said.

Transit collectibles have become a mini-obsession for McCann, who said he frequents the T's gift shop at Ward Maps in Cambridge and frequently gives MBTA maps and T-shirts as Christmas gifts. Last year, he bought an old tin MBTA "under construction" sign, which he gleefully moves around the house to wherever renovations are underway: the porch, the bathroom. They plan to hang their newly won panel near a stairwell in their house in Hull.

Like many, Sylvia Richards, a New Hampshire architect, told Metro she fell in love with the paintings as a young commuter taking in the simple portraits frozen in time.

"All of the paintings are charmingly unpretentious," said Richards, now the proud owner of a painting of a Green Line train.

Richards, who studied at Wellesley College and MIT, said she hasn't found a spot to display her new purchase yet, though.

"It is really quite big," she said. "And it will depend on how much it smells like the T."

UN: South Sudan rivals

A peace agreement signed in August is on the verge of collapse.

Warring parties in South Sudan are expanding stockpiles of weapons and ammunition in violation of an August peace deal — and President Salva Kiir risks fueling violence with plans to almost triple the number of states in the country, said United Nations experts.

In a report to the U.N. Security Council, seen by Reuters on Wednesday, the experts said they were examining the flow of arms into South Sudan and had “credible, independent” reports that both the government and opposition were boosting their supplies.

The experts, who monitor U.N. sanctions on South Sudan, said they would provide details shortly. The 15-member Security Council warned in August it was ready to impose an arms embargo on the country if the peace agreement collapsed.

A political row between Kiir and his former deputy Riek Machar sparked civil war in late 2013 and reopened ethnic fault lines between Kiir's Dinka and Machar's Nuer people. More than 10,000 people have been killed.

Kiir and Machar signed the peace deal in August. Since then, both sides have accused one another of attacks. Humanitarian groups have pulled out of parts of the oil-rich country where heavy violence has been reported.

The experts said both sides were “persistently failing to implement a permanent ceasefire and failing to agree meaningfully to security arrangements that are requisite for the establishment of the transitional national government.”

They also said Kiir had taken steps to “undermine the power-sharing formula” that underpins the peace deal by planning to increase the number of states in South Sudan to 28 from 10. The presidential decree is due to come into effect by mid-November.

“South Sudan has a long history of violent disputes over internal border demarcation,” the experts wrote. “Implementation

Plane crashes in South Sudan, dozens killed

A Russian-built cargo plane with passengers on board crashed on Wednesday after taking off from the airport in South Sudan's capital, killing dozens of people, witnesses said.

An official said three people on board survived.

The precise death toll was not immediately clear after the Antonov-12 B plane turbo prop plane crashed soon after take-off, leaving chunks of wreckage, bodies and cargo strewn along a bank of the White Nile River.

A witness saw 41 bodies, some of which were covered by cloth. A police officer also put the death toll at 41. Another witness counted at least 32 killed. Presidential spokesman Ateny Wek Ateny said the plane was carrying 18 people, including the six foreign crew, according to official documents.

of the decree and the consequent discussion over the exact borders as well as competition over new governorships may inject new drivers of conflict into the ongoing civil war."

The government continues to target civilians in oil-producing Unity state, said the experts, citing agencies which had reported more than 50 rapes in October and accusations that government troops shot into swamps at fleeing civilians, burned houses and abducted women and children. REUTERS

ISIS bomb caused Russian plane crash: Security forces

Evidence now suggests that a bomb planted by the Islamic State militant group is the likely cause of last weekend's crash of a Russian airliner over Egypt's Sinai peninsula, U.S. and European security sources said on Wednesday.

Islamic State, or ISIS, which controls swathes of Iraq and Syria and is battling the Egyptian army in the Sinai Peninsula, said again on Wednesday it brought down the airplane, adding it would eventually tell the world how it carried out the attack.

The Airbus A321M crashed on Saturday in the Sinai Peninsula shortly after taking off from the resort of Sharm el-Sheikh on its way to the Russian city of St Petersburg, killing all 224 people on board.

The U.S. and European security sources stressed they had reached no final conclusions about the crash.

Britain on Wednesday

cited the likely possibility of an explosive device as the cause of the crash, but made no mention of any group that may have been responsible.

"We have concluded that there is a significant possibility that the crash was caused by an explosive device on board the aircraft," Britain's foreign secretary, Philip Hammond, said after a meeting of the government's crisis response committee chaired by Prime Minister David Cameron. REUTERS

Houston's 'bathroom ordinance' tanks

The measure was defeated by a 61-39 margin.

A failure to woo black and Hispanic voters is one reason Houston overwhelmingly rejected an anti-discrimination measure branded the "bathroom ordinance," making it the only major U.S. city without broad protections seen as key to competing for business.

The proposition was put forward to shield people from racial, ethnic, gender and other discrimination. But the "no" campaign argued that the law would give men access to women's bathrooms because transgender individuals would be allowed to use bathrooms matching their gender identity.

The measure failed by a vote of 61 percent to 39 percent in Tuesday's election in a major blow to proponents including outgoing Mayor Annise Parker, who is openly gay.

Political experts said the wide margin implied that Democrats and voters with progressive values had crossed over to join social conservatives in voting against the ordinance.

"They didn't fully engage all the voters. They never did control the message in the minority community," said political consultant Marc Campos. "They never did engage in Spanish-language TV buying. I thought that was stupid."

Houston is 25 percent African-American and 37 percent Hispanic, and blacks are generally overrepresented at the polls while Hispanics are underrepresented.

Mistrial for Alabama police officer who threw Indian man

A U.S. judge on Wednesday declared a second mistrial when a jury deadlocked again in the case of an Alabama police officer accused of throwing an Indian man to the ground, according to federal prosecutors.

Eric Parker, 27, was retried on accusations that he used unreasonable force while working as a Madison, Alabama, police officer. During his first trial in September, another jury in Huntsville, Alabama, federal court also deadlocked, resulting in the first mistrial.

Parker faced up to 10 years in prison on a single charge of depriving the Indian grandfather, then 57, of his civil rights in a case that drew international attention.

Chipotle's E. coli outbreak threatens sales, emboldens critics

Chipotle Mexican Grill Inc.'s food poisoning outbreak in Washington state and Oregon threatens to scare diners away from the popular burrito chain and has become fodder for one of its most vocal critics.

Health officials are scrambling to identify the cause of the E. coli food poisoning that has sickened 41 people, most of whom dined at eight Chipotle restaurants in the greater Seattle and Portland areas.

All of Chipotle's 43 outlets in those cities have been closed since Oct. 31. The company is deep-cleaning the closed units, testing and replacing food and has hired consultants to tighten up its food safety.

Analysts expect the closures, and the negative publicity surrounding the outbreak, to depress sales at the roughly 1,900-unit chain that already was seeing its red-hot sales growth cool.

Shares in Chipotle, which has had two other food-safety lapses this year, closed 1.3 percent lower at $614.98 on Wednesday. The stock closed at just over $750 on Oct. 13.

The Center for Consumer Freedom, a critic of Chipotle backed by the food and beverage industry, on Wednesday took a swipe at the chain with a full-page ad in the New York Post reading: "You can't spell 'Chipotle' without 'E. coli'."

Lil Wayne's property seized over jet debt

Lil Wayne's problems are definitely Rich People Problems. The rapper's Miami Beach mansion was stormed by cops Wednesday to seize property in connection with his dispute with private jet leasing company the Signature Group, according to TMZ. Law enforcement officials arrived to seize some "sizable" assets from the home because of Lil Wayne's failure to pay a $2 million judgment against him in the company's suit against him that came down in September. He's also on the hook for $200,000 in Signature Group's legal fees. The company initially sued Lil Wayne for failing to pay for two years of his three-year contract with it. Lil Wayne himself wasn't there to see the fracas, though — the rapper is in Los Angeles. In fact, according to paparazzi, he visited the Ace of Diamonds strip club Monday night. He might need a return visit to cheer him up after today.

Why would you try to steal Serena Williams' phone?

In the pantheon of dumb criminals, this guy who thought he could outrun Serena Williams has got to be one of the dumbest. The tennis champ took to Facebook to regale fans and friends with a tale of a dinner out for Chinese food ("delicious, I may add") turning into an audition for Wonder Woman. "When least expected, lo and behold this common petty thief grabbed my phone and swiftly left," she writes in the post, which was accompanied by a photo of her photoshopped into a Supergirl costume. "I jumped up, weaved my way in and out of the cozy restaurant (leaping over a chair or two) and chased him down. He began to run but I was too fast. (Those sprints came in handy). I was upon him in a flash!" She confronted her adversary, who played dumb and claimed he'd grabbed the wrong phone. Sure, buddy. That explains the running.

Williams ends her post with a not-so-subtle reminder that she'd make a great superhero, if Marvel or DC are looking for anyone: "Superhero? Maybe? Or HELL YEA!! I've got the speed, the jumps, the power, the body, the seduction, the sex appeal, the strength, the leadership and yet the calm to weather the storm," she boasts, and rightfully so.

Halle Berry's exes are trolling her hard

You know what's worse than going through a very messy and public breakup with your short-tempered French husband? Having your other ex-husbands take to Twitter to chime in about the whole thing. Isn't social media the worst? First David Justice went on a Twitter rant about his ex. "Yup, me, Eric [Benet], Gabriel [Aubrey] and Olivier [Martinez] were all her 'knight in shining armor,' until it ends. Then we all become the worst guys in history," he posted. "Just wait, Olivier. It's coming. She insinuated that her daughter wasn't safe around Gabriel. Look it up and see the reason. Just wrong." As if that wasn't all bad enough, then Benet piled on with, "My man [David Justice] is tweeting some truth." Real classy, guys. Real classy.

Carrie Underwood isn't like those other divorcing celebs

In a sea of celebrity divorces, Carrie Underwood is looking to position herself as a calm little island paradise of marital stability. Because sure! In case you weren't paying attention, the "American Idol" champ has been married for five years to hockey player Mike Fisher, and she insists they're doing just fine. "Everyone is getting divorced. They're dropping like flies," she tells Cosmo. "We are good." Sure, fine. But isn't it a little odd that she's even bringing this up at all? Seems suspicious, is all I'm saying.

'Peanuts' and other movie adaptations that stayed faithful

"The Peanuts Movie" arrives looking just like the comic strip's storied TV specials. It's hardly the first adaptation of a show to remain true.

@mattprigge

Look familiar? This image from "The Peanuts Movie" re-creates a favorite image from the "Peanuts" comic strips and old TV specials. TWENTIETH CENTURY FOX

"IN THE LOOP" (2009)

"In the Loop" IFC FILMS

Source: "The Thick of It"
The British political comedy "The Thick of It" has such a strong hook, it's been repeated in both "Veep," its American equivalent, and this even more brilliant spin-off film. Like the show, "In the Loop" hangs with always-anxious bureaucrats as they wheel and deal and creatively curse. (There's a "swearing consultant.") There are now Americans too and a big, Iraq-esque war, but it never loses sight of the basic pleasures, chief among them Peter Capaldi's spin doctor insulting everyone.

"SOUTH PARK: BIGGER, LONGER & UNCUT" (1999)

"South Park: Bigger, Longer & Uncut" PARAMOUNT PICTURES

Source: "South Park"

There's lots and lots and lots of swearing, a couple big name cameo voices, a barrage of musical numbers and even a couple effects that are more than two guys working with construction paper. But the "South Park" movie, which hit theaters in the midst of the show's third season, is basically the same thing, only better than usual. Indeed, if it did anything, it established that the show was no fluke and that creators Trey Parker and Matt Stone had a truly unique angle on America, repression, hypocrisy and anything else they saw fit to satirize. After this, the show would be even giddier about tackling hot button topics, to all of society's betterment.

"AND NOW FOR SOMETHING COMPLETELY DIFFERENT" (1971)

"And Now for Something Completely Different" PROVIDED

Source: "Monty Python's Flying Circus"

As a troupe and individually, Monty Python made several landmark films that kept the spirit of their experimental sketch show without actually being like it. But their first movie was pretty much an exact replica. In fact, it was simply a best-of sketch cavalcade, with greatest hits (the parrot sketch, "The Lumberjack Song," "Upper-Class Twit of the Year," etc.) re-shot, and with no laugh track. The reason? They wanted to invade America, and no one had heard of them. "Monty Python and the Holy Grail" would later take care of that better than their cinematic debut, but it's still a fine entry point for newbs.

"JACKASS: THE MOVIE" (2002), "JACKASS 2" (2006), "JACKASS 3-D"

"Jackass 3-D" PARAMOUNT PICTURES

Source: "Jackass"

Like the "South Park" movie, the inevitable "Jackass" movies were essentially bigger and raunchier copies of the TV show. In this case, the films are mere conveyor belts of gross-out stunts and body trauma, exploring what the physique can take or how far the squad members will go in the pursuit of their, um, craft. Not that they were simply TV on movie screens: By the third, we get dildos flying out of the screen in beautiful 3-D — surely one of the more original uses of a technology too often utilized for the truly crass and lowest common denominator.

Wild Belle on creating a magical 'Dreamland'

Wild Belle talks about rocky relationships and their new, bigger, bolder sound.

EMILY LAURENCE
@EmLaurence
emily.laurence@metro.us

Natalie Bergman, one half of the brother-sister psychedelic pop duo Wild Belle, doesn't shy away from talking about relationships. It's the constant muse for her songs, the latest of which is "Giving Up On You," about a rocky romance she ended shortly after writing the song.

"The funny thing is, I was writing about the demise of the relationship before it was even over," she says. "The song is about overcoming a relationship that was very torturous. I had to destroy it because it was killing me."

Bringing the boom

Along with her brother Elliot Bergman, she has been working on their sophomore album "Dreamland" for the past two years. It's finally done — slated to be released January 16, 2016 — and the single teases a bigger, fuller sound than their debut, "Isles."

"Shed and shred, that's my motto," says Wild Belle's Natalie Bergman. PROVIDED

While the new album will still have the synthy island feel that Wild Belle is known for, the new album includes harp guitars and arps, a synthesizer Bergman says sounds like a helicopter and adds a lot of fire to the album.

Building on childhood dreams

When Bergman talks about her brother Elliot, it's with respect and awe. "He's one of my biggest inspirations and I'm blessed to have such an amazing brother, who has taught me so much about music," she says. While Natalie is responsible for Wild Belle's lyrics, Elliot is more of the soundsmith, particularly for "Dreamland."

Natalie says when she was 10, Elliot gave her a compilation of Jamaican female vocalists doing cover songs and one track, Della Humphrey's "Dreamland," really stuck with her.

"Now, after all these years, I get to put out my own record, 'Dreamland,'" she says.

Often when they go into the studio together, they don't have a plan and Bergman says what results is "happy accidents."

"The goal is to make something beautiful and something people want to be a part of and that they've never heard before," she says. "We want to create a universe that welcomes everyone but no one has ever seen."

Shed and shred

Bergman says making "Dreamlands" was a healing experience for her, a way to move past toxic love and bad habits. To her, writing songs about past heartbreak doesn't open up old wounds; it salves.

Cocktail dialogue

A user-friendly menu isn't the only draw at Ames Street Deli.

Thirsty

LUKE O'NEIL
@lukeoneil47

Ames Street Deli will call to mind the set up of the Somerville locale, in that it's split between a bar and a somewhat fancier restaurant. But it also has the added bonus of serving as a cafe by morning and a lunch spot by day. All of which is fine, but the real draw is the cocktail list.

"It's a little more of a relaxed vibe," says co-owner Sam Treadway. "We take our drinks seriously, just like at Backbar, but we also attempt to have a lot of fun with it, too."

That means quirky names for the cocktails, but a user-friendly menu that breaks things down in an informative way.

The menu uses a matrix layout, with spirit categories along one axis and descriptive terms along the other, be it price range like Grad Student (You Can Afford It) or Strong & Bold (Think: Buzz Aldrin).

"With that, we really wanted to help people have that cocktail dialogue," Treadway says. "I used to work at Drink, and even at Backbar people struggle with the menu and often times head to the bartender's choice option. That's great, but it's difficult when someone says, 'I'll do bartender's choice or whatever.'"

Some of the best, from the

DEREK KOUYOUMIAN

Weird & Wonderful category for example, include the Hoppy Word, a Last Word variation made with mescal that's been infused with mosaic hops from the local Aeronaut Brewing, with the hops drying out the sweeter ingredients significantly.

If that sounds up your alley, or if it doesn't, you should be able to find something on the menu, he says.

"This format is actually giving people the verbiage, so it helps them decide for themselves.

St. Lucia: Paradise found

ALL PHOTOS SHUTTERSTOCK

St. Lucia is one of the loveliest islands in the Caribbean, thanks to its rainforest, beaches and dramatic volcanic spires.

There is a sign at the top of Tet Paul nature trail in St. Lucia that points towards rough steps cut into the bank. They are, if the sign is to be believed, a stairway to heaven — and whoever put up the sign knew what they were talking about. The view from the top, over the two Pitons that are this Caribbean island's trademark, is indeed heavenly.

St. Lucia is sandwiched between the islands of Martinique and St. Vincent, and is a favorite call for cruise ships sailing one-week voyages from Barbados or longer Southern Caribbean itineraries from Miami or Fort Lauderdale. Most ships visit in winter, when temperatures average 80 degrees. Between June and November, don't be surprised by the occasional tropical shower.

Big ships dock in the capital, Castries; smaller vessels operated by the likes of SeaDream Yacht Top three excursions on St. Lucia

- Hotel Chocolat Boucan's (Hotelchocolat.com) Tree to Bar tour starts with a walk through the hotel's estate to pick cocoa pods and ends with a lesson in how to make your own bar of chocolate. Nonresidents must book in advance.

- Saddle up and set off for a horseback ride along the island's north coast beaches (Islandroutes.co.uk) before cooling off in the sea — while still on your steed!

- See the dramatic Pitons the easy way — on a 20-minute "flightseeing" helicopter tour from Castries (Stluciahelicopters.com). The journey takes you over Marigot Bay, the Sulphur Springs, waterfalls and coral reefs.

through the rainforest canopy.

There are guided Segway tours from Rodney Bay, nature walks through the rainforest in search of the island's national bird (the St. Lucian Parrot, of course) or hikes up to Fort Rodney on Pigeon Island. It was built by British Admiral George Rodney in the 18th century to spy on the French naval base in Martinique.

If that sounds too strenuous, island tours take in the aforementioned Tet Paul and also Sulphur Springs, known as the world's only drive-in volcano, where bubbling pits of lava are hot enough to boil an egg. If time allows, take a dip in the nearby mud baths, which are said to be good for the complexion.

OPPORTUNITY KNOCKS IN WEEK 9

FANTASY SPORTS

ADAM LEVITAN
alevitan@metro.us

It's moving time in fantasy football. With just five weeks left in most leagues' regular seasons, we have to throw caution to the wind.

The bad news is that Week 8 was the worst week we've had all year for injuries. The good news is that's opened up a ton of opportunities for active and aggressive owners. We can attack the waiver wire for strong value and pounce on desperate owners in trade situations. Some fallout from the injuries:

Marky Mark to the house

Khiry Robinson's season-ending leg injury is big news for Mark Ingram. The notion that the Saints use a three-headed committee at running back regardless of available talent is misguided. Note that when Pierre Thomas was injured last year (Weeks 4-7), Ingram averaged 29.0 touches per game. And in the six games Khiry missed last year, Ingram was at 25.7 touches per game. Ingram, who is currently at 18.9 touches, is about to get a nice boost.

Wondering about Stevie

Keenan Allen and Philip Rivers had about as good a chemistry as any duo in

NFL matchups

Fire up these borderline wideouts in Week 9:

Marques Colston vs. Tennessee — Colston was back up at 68.9 percent of the snaps in Week 8, suggesting he's finally feeling fresh.

Martavis Bryant vs. Oakland — Bryant never played more than 59.1 percent of snaps last regular season. He was at 81.6 percent last Sunday against the Bengals.

Malcom Floyd vs. Chicago — Stevie Johnson is a better play, but Floyd should run a few more high-percentage routes with Keenan Allen done.

the league, leading to an elite 77.9 catch rate on 11.1 targets per game. That's a lot of production to fill.

Vertical stretch Malcom Floyd gets a little boost, but the bigger boost goes to Stevie Johnson. Formerly limited to a slot role and around 80 percent of the snaps, look for Johnson to push closer to 100 percent as he adds outside receiving in two-wide sets to his role. And anytime Antonio Gates (knee) sits, Johnson will have an even bigger role.

The Bell tolls

The Steelers are a one-back team. So when Le'Veon Bell returned from suspension, DeAngelo Williams was relegated to strict spectator status. But that doesn't mean the Steelers are south on him. They remember the first two weeks of the season, when Williams played on 87.6 percent of the snaps and got 23.0 touches per game. With a near-every-down role in one of the game's best offenses, Williams will be a top-10 running back the rest of the season.

NFL news

Vernon Davis has fallen off a cliff the last two seasons. But was that because of a skill-set decline or was it due to a regressing, dysfunctional San Francisco offense? I suspect it was the latter, as Davis still runs like the wind and 31 isn't overly old for a tight end. Now that he's been acquired by the Broncos, the ceiling returns.

Gary Kubiak is a strong proponent of the two-TE package as a base formation and Owen Daniels simply couldn't get it done anymore. Expect Davis to see find plenty of openings in the seam with Demaryius Thomas and Manny Sanders attracting all the attention outside.
